

Attack of the Jones: In a galaxy far far away the rebels are..... Ok maybe it wouldn't make a good George Lucas film but this week we're looking at making mini you's (as opposed to ewes) and also subject..... I mean expose..... that is to say show you a Library 2.0 site (a library type Web2.0 site). This weeks bit of fun is brought to you by LibraryThing and Doppelme.

Week Seven: LibraryThing and Doppelme

LibraryThing

LibraryThing was developed for booklovers and allows you to not only create an online catalogue of your books but to connect to other people who have similar libraries and reading tastes.

Now before I get any comments, We're librarians so it goes without saying that our idea of fun includes reading and books (that and horn rimmed glasses, tweed skirt and blouse, and our hair tied up in a bun as we run around shhh-ing people in the library).

Step 1: Explore and join up to LibraryThing (www.librarything.com)

Step 2: Add a handful of books from your personal library (or favourites from our library)

Step 3: Let us know your library name and what you think about LibraryThing in your weekly blog entry.

Step 4 (optional): (If you're up on html) Click on "Blog widgets" link and add your library to your blog

Doppelme

Doppelme is a fun site that allows you to create an avatar for your blog, chats or even Facebook account. An Avatar is a caricature of you however you want to represent yourself to the world.

Step 1: Go to Doppelme (www.doppelme.com) and create an Avatar to join Doppelme.

Step 2: Sign in and explore your new options and sections.

Step 3 (optional): Add your Doppelganger to your Facebook, blog or even email signature.

Step 4: Tell us what you think of Doppelme and maybe even why you chose the Avatar you did.

Embrace the voices within and have fun creating as many mini me's as you like.
